- 8.2. Abuse of the bonus program refers to actions taken by a client solely for the purpose of profiting from bonuses without the intention of conducting full-fledged trading activities.

Signs of such actions include (but are not limited to): hedging between accounts, manipulation of volumes and spreads, arbitrage between brokers, and other risk minimization schemes aimed at profiting solely from bonuses.

Excessively aggressive trading, as well as trading aimed solely at profiting from the bonus, contradicts the principles of this promotional campaign.

- 8.3. The company reserves the right to adjust the trading results on the account, cancel the full amount of bonus funds, and take other actions if the client's activity shows signs of:
- hedging trades on the bonus account using other accounts, including those opened with third-party companies;
 - manipulative practices aimed at minimizing personal risk while using the bonus, including trading with excessive market risk when bonus funds significantly exceed personal funds;
 - focusing on rapid conversion of bonus funds into ownership by avoiding market risk and/or combining the benefits of this promotion with other offers, rebates, or company payments;
 - intentionally creating the appearance of regular trading to conceal the client's true motives;
 - any other actions intended to abuse the bonus program.
